Huddleston is a philosopher of film. Her attention to doubling – through character, piano-key motifs and split composition – recalls Rainer Werner Fassbinder's Despair (1978). Based on the novel by Vladimir Nabokov, Fassbinder reimagines the protagonist – Hermann Hermann – as Eurotrash amid silent rain.

One of the most difficult scenes to write is a kissing scene, or really any scene when when things get hot and heavy. Writers worry about being too obscene (will my mother read this?), or even worse, not vulgar enough (no one wants to be labeled a prude).. Humans are private creatures when it comes to lust, and illustrating an intimate scene can still make the most seasoned writer nervous.
