Toy camera. If only life could be like that sometimes, just blurred at the edges, slightly out of focus, a tiny bit fogged, and those people in your frame caught looking, harmless, like cartoon characters, and the surprises you couldn't see when you snapped the shutter, guessing at focus, exposure—how the sun glows softly,

Knox Overstreet played a fair part in the film Dead Poets Society. One particular scene that Knox was in was the phone conversation with the girl he loves, Kris. The scene starts with Knox at the telephone. The camera closes in on his face and his fingers dialling the telephone. The camera stays on his face as the phone rings and awaits a pick up. When Kris picks up the phone, Knox's facial expression changes from...

August 8, 2013 – The Podunk Poets: Cindy Jollotta & Kelly Kidd – Vocals, Patrick Generosa – Drums, Suzanne Birrell – Bass, Jake Kelly – Guitar. For several years now the demise of the still photograph has been foretold. It is said that with video having progressed to the stage that it has already, there is little need anymore for a camera that shoots stills.
